

temple had an išbiul- for its own personnel, including specific regulations for that temple (Taggar-Cohen 2011, 14–17).

§ 3. The duties and responsibilities of the temple personnel covered by this išbiul-text are as follows: 1) caring for the food and beverages of the gods; 2) preparing the sacrifices, of which they are permitted to eat, while being warned not to distribute them outside the temple; 3) celebrating all festivals on time with all necessary food, both regular calendar festivals and festivals celebrated by specific temple functionaries; 4) maintaining a state of purity if coming in contact with the gods. There is an emphasis on personal integrity in both purity and moral conduct in relation to the wealth and possessions of the temple; 5) conducting their duties with fear and reverence towards the gods; 6) guarding the temples' grounds against intruders, allowing entrance only to those permitted. Guarding also includes fire watch and sleeping at night in the temple (Taggar-Cohen 2006, 107–139).

Tempelhymnen(sammlung) ((collection of) temple hymns).

§ 1. Collection of Sumerian temple hymns. – § 2. Other temple hymns.

§ 1. Collection of Sumerian temple hymns. Modern title of a Sum. literary composition, whose ancient title, derived from the first line of the text, was é u₆-nir an ki-da múa “O E-unir, grown together with heaven and earth”. The manuscripts from Nippur and Ur date to the Ur III and OB periods, with a forerunner from Abū Salābih. The subscript of the text ascribes its compilation to En-hedu-ana, the daughter of Sargon of Akkade. The collection contains 545 lines, divided into 42 hymns, each of them praising a temple and – with the exception of the last hymn – addressing the deity with the refrain: “DN has erected a house in your precinct, o TN, and taken his seat upon your dais”. The temples are located all over Babylonia from Eridu in the south to Sippar, Ešnunna and Akkad in the north (survey: Sjöberg/Bergmann 1969, 13).

Tempelmodell. A. Mesopotamien.

Fragmente von verschiedenen T. wurden in Uruk* in K XVII im Füllschutt zwischen den Bauschichten C und D/E gefunden:

a. Eckfragment eines weißen Steinblocks, dessen Außenseiten durch vertikale Vor- und Rücksprünge gegliedert sind; in einer Nische nahe der Ecke ist eine Tür mit zwei begleitenden Bügelschäften ausgearbeitet (Heinrich 1937, 45, Taf. 48: k; Becker 1993, 86; Taf. 91 Nr. 1026). Gleichartig reliefierte Splitter mögen zum selben Objekt gehören (Becker 1993, 86; Taf. 91 Nr. 1025, 1027: b, 1029: d, e).
